MAKING THE BIG DECISION

It starts as a glimmer of an idea, a murmur of a suggestion, a realisation that evaluating dogs comes relatively easy to you. You start to wonder if you have the elusive “eye for a dog” and you begin exploring the possibility of becoming a Breed Judge.

Behind you, you have several years of dedicated and intensive experience and you have indulged in extensive research within your area of interest. Is it time to expand your knowledge base and extend your experiential level? Are you ready to become a Judge?

Hopefully, your motivation for becoming a Judge is healthy and sound. If you’re embarking on this life-changing new role, are you wanting to “go out there and prove a point”, or do you, perhaps, feel that you can do a far better job than the Judges already in the ring? Are you starting to judge because you no longer want to run around the ring as an exhibitor, or do you feel there’s nothing else interesting in dogdom to keep you occupied? Are you doing it in order to feed your ego, or do you see it as a ticket to overseas trips? Moving into the role of Breed Judge with any of these motivations would be a huge mistake – best you abandon the notion before you spend too much time and money proving to yourself and your exhibitors that this role would not be suitable for you.

Not everyone is suited to becoming a Breed Judge. It usually is, but not necessarily, a natural progression from exhibiting and breeding, coupled with a desire to give back to the sport in order to guide others. A sincere interest in dogs, together with the desire to build a reputation for integrity and ability, are the motivating forces behind truly successful Judges. There is enormous satisfaction in working with a ring full of beautiful dogs and it is at that time that a dedicated Judge realises judging is a privilege to be valued, never taken lightly.

When you apply to the KUSA Breed Judges Learning Programme, you will need to give full motivation for wanting to become a Breed Judge. Think about this carefully and in detail. You’ll find there’s no single reason for wanting to do this – make a note of all your reasons and elaborate on them in your motivation letter.

Broadening your experience base

It’s not just about stepping out of the ring as an exhibitor and back into it as a Judge. Experience is built in layers added over time. Become involved in as many aspects of the dog game as you can – there’s a wealth of activities that may interest you. You will be serving the community and you will be adding to your experiential base.

How about a bit of ring stewarding? Most clubs are in dire need of people willing to serve as Ring Stewards, so volunteer your services at an open show, get some experience in this field and move on towards serving at championship shows. You will be doing compulsory ring stewardship modules during the training course, but the experience you gain at this level will put you in good stead for your judging studies ahead.

How about serving on a club committee to experience what it takes to organise a show? Are you a member of a club, specifically a Specialist or Group Club? Connecting with like-minded enthusiasts is a valuable source of learning and experience.

Read a lot. Buy books and magazines. Get your hands on anything at all related to the breed(s) in which you are interested and any other canine-related topic. You can never do too much reading.

Perhaps you were a Child or Junior Handler. As such, you already have a wealth of experience in correct handling procedures and the way in which dogs are presented to their best. Graduating from the handling classes to judging the handling classes and later, the breed classes, is a natural progression for many young handlers.

A very important aspect of developing your 'eye' for a dog lies in breeding quality dogs. Have you bred a litter? From matching pedigrees, considering genetic issues, understanding genotypes and phenotypes, planning and supervising the mating, have you assisted a whelping, raised a litter, selected the potentially good specimens, followed through to training, preparation, and campaigning; and finished at least one home-bred champion? Have you had the opportunity to observe and learn which helpless neonate will grow and develop into a fine example of the breed? Have you explored the thrill of improving on the breeding stock? Do you know what makes a champion? Being active in the dog community shows that you are interested and committed. It develops your confidence and your knowledge and it improves your credibility.

If you've latched onto the dog game with a fly-by-night winner and you're in it for the glory the dog(s) will bring you; if you believe you're on the edge of fame and fortune and a lot of overseas trips; if you "just want to give judging a go", you've chosen the wrong field for your selfish motivation and its best you leave the game now.

If you've taken the time to develop your interest and involvement in dogs and dog matters; if you are passionate about dogs and see them as an important part of your life; if you want to give service to the community and the sport; if you thirst for more knowledge; if your heart is in the right place and you're 'in it for the duration', you have what it takes to be a Judge and, with hard work and dedication, you will likely make a huge success of your endeavours.

Coping with what lies ahead

If done well, judging is hard work – it demands knowledge, stamina and intense concentration. Before you commit yourself to the long road ahead, you ought to consider the following:

Are you physically able to cope with:

- standing, bending, walking for hours on end with little, if any, rest
- awkward conditions in the ring such as insufficient shade or poor ground surface
- working for hours without sustenance or refreshment
- being exposed to all weather elements – blazing sun, driving rain, blasting wind
- feeling ill, tired, or in pain
- finishing your assignment within a reasonable time
- travelling great distances, if necessary

Are you emotionally able to cope with:

- the responsibility of your decisions and the effect thereof
- the knowledge that everyone at ringside will be watching your every move
- the likelihood that you will be fiercely criticised
- taking control of your ring in a decisive manner
- the reality that you can't please everyone

Are you socially able to cope with:

- making completely impartial decisions in the ring
- maintaining dignified behaviour, poise, and self-control during your role as a Judge and during unexpected situations
- the need for self-confidence and the courage of your convictions
- avoiding the temptation to indulge in reciprocal arrangements

- earning and maintaining respect in your position as Judge
- maintaining mutual respect with every other role-player
- the need to divorce friendships and personal grudges from the task at hand

Are you cognitively able to cope with:

- comprehensive study of breed standards and support material
- concentrating carefully for several hours at a stretch
- needing to make decisions quickly and decisively
- supporting your decisions with clearly-presented reasoning
- the cultivation of life-long learning

Are you financially able to cope with:

- registration and examination fees
- travel and accommodation costs
- additional expenses such as kenneling for your dogs while away, and other household arrangements
- support and research material
- attendance at seminars – perhaps in another city

Reality check

Becoming a Breed Judge will not secure you an elevation in status and it will not earn you free tickets to a game or a promotion at work. A Breed Judge is just an ordinary person – not a little god. A judging assignment comprising several hundred exhibits is not a glorious task – it's very hard work.

At a dog show, there are a number of elements that need to be in place. First and foremost are the dogs, followed closely by the exhibitor who paid for your opinion and will present their dogs in anticipation of your learned decisions. After the Administrators of the show and the Ring Stewards who keep the proceedings flowing smoothly, is the Judge who is expected to be an expert on the breed(s) and deliver unbiased opinions. A Judge is, therefore, just one element in a cohesive event – a sport – a hobby. While the responsibility of serving as a Breed Judge is enormous, the role is not equivalent to a CEO of a major company, so best you pack away any emerging egos.

The purpose of judging

The core purpose of judging is to participate in the enhancement of breeding pure-bred dogs.

Breed Judges, therefore, carry a huge responsibility and need to bear serious intent of purpose and careful preparation and study. What Judges do in the ring can have important and long-lasting consequences on the quality of dogs in the future.

Integrity is as important to a Judge as is knowledge and experience. A Judge must never say or do anything that could raise a question about his or her integrity and impartiality. Judges who lack these essential qualities should not be in the ring.

What do exhibitors expect from dog Judges?

Judges should:

- have a thorough understanding of canine conformation and movement
- know and understand breed standards thoroughly
- have a thorough knowledge of KUSA Rules and Regulations
- behave within the boundaries of good judging etiquette and impartiality
- possess accurate observation skills
- be able to recognise characteristics and identify qualities and shortcomings
- have a clearly-defined silhouette/blueprint in mind understand the elements of type, temperament, balance and soundness
- be able to make a logical analysis
- make value judgments
- describe and synthesize the outcome of judging
- hold the courage of convictions
- possess integrity and a strong ethical base
- practice life-long learning and research

Do you have the courage of your convictions?

Sitting at ringside under your gazebo, with friends and family at hand, it's the easiest thing to participate in a little 'ringside judging' while watching someone else do the judging.

Now, imagine yourself standing alone in the centre of the ring in the role of Judge. Your support system is gone and everyone ringside is watching you. It remains a scary realisation no matter how many times you enter the ring! Your comfort zone is going to take a huge knock and there's only one way to prepare yourself – with knowledge. And that's what the KUSA Breed Judges Learning Programme is all about.

Your support base

If breed judging is what you want to do, and you feel you have what it takes to follow through and make a success of your endeavours, we welcome you and wish you well in your studies.

At all times, be aware that you will have a strong support system to guide you and help you whenever you need assistance.

Please contact the KUSA Office should you require assistance: jecjudges@kusa.co.za

PREPARING TO APPLY

The Kennel Union of Southern Africa has set the following criteria to qualify for entry as a Candidate Judge:

QUALIFYING CRITERIA

An applicant wishing to apply to join the KUSA Breed Judges Learning Programme must meet the following criteria:

- a) must be at least 18 years of age
- b) must be a permanent resident of South Africa or Namibia
- c) must be a member in good standing of KUSA for a continuous period of five (5) years as at date of application
- d) must have a minimum of 7 (seven) years' demonstrated involvement which must include experience in as many of the following as possible:
 - ownership of a Kennel Union-registered dog
 - exhibition of a Kennel Union-registered dog to breed championship
 - recorded as the breeder of a Kennel Union registered litter
 - ring stewardship at Championship and/or Non-championship shows
 - club administration, committee work, show organisation or any other Kennel Union-approved canine activity.

THE APPLICATION

If you are satisfied that you comfortably meet all the qualifying criteria, you are ready to prepare your application.

APPLICATION

The applicant must gather the following material in support of his/her application:

- a) a comprehensive curriculum vitae recording the following:
 - motivation for wanting to judge and setting out the reason(s) for selecting the chosen path of qualification (see Sch 10 App 1 Reg 1.2.1).
 - a summary of involvement in canine activities and achievements
- b) the completed application form

This application, together with all supporting documents must be forwarded to the KUSA Office at jecjudges@kusa.co.za

Closing date for the submission of new applications is as follows:

- For studies to commence in the first semester: 15 January
For studies to commence in the second semester: 15 July

AFTER YOUR APPLICATION

The KUSA Office will circulate your application to the Judges' Education Council (JEC) for a review of your eligibility to become a Judge. If you were careful to meet all requirements before applying, your application is most likely to be successful.

The JEC shall be entitled to convene an interview or discussion with the Applicant at its sole discretion for the purpose of satisfying the Applicant's eligibility and/or to address any concerns relating to the chosen path of qualification.

The KUSA Office will notify the Applicant of the JEC's decision on the application and, if successful, will advise the Applicant to make payment of the registration fee. You can find a current fee list on the KUSA website (Schedule 7). The Applicant will after approval by the JEC be referred to as a "Candidate Judge".

Once payment of the registration fee has been processed, the KUSA Office will advise the Candidate Judge that access has been granted to the [restricted area of the KUSA website] Study Guides which may be downloaded through the Judge's Membership Portal.

Should the application be unsuccessful, the KUSA Office will provide the JEC's reasons why the Applicant's request to join the Learning Programme was unsuccessful. The Applicant may reapply once all the qualifying criteria have been met.

WHAT LIES AHEAD?

On receipt of payment, your application will be confirmed by the KUSA Office and you will be granted access to the relevant study guides and forms via your web portal on the KUSA website. You are advised to come to terms with the content as soon as possible and this is also a good time to start building up your reference library with acquisitions of breed-specific and general judging books and articles.

This first level of study is specifically designed to serve as a solid foundation for your further studies. The content will be mostly generic and will focus on best judging practices, tips and hints for examining a dog, the basics of canine anatomy, conformation, and movement, and, very importantly, an introduction to the KUSA Regulations that govern everything we do in this sport and by which we must all abide.

During Level 1, you will attend a Introduction and Orientation Course – as the name implies, a brief introduction to what lies ahead. You will be notified whether this will take place as a webinar or a person-to-person seminar. Following this, you will complete the Level 1 examinations.

Realistically, you should be able to successfully complete this level of study within one year so that your successful completion of the examinations (in June or November) will take you straight into your chosen field of study.

We wish you great success as you begin your new journey and may your greatest thrill lie in discovering the intricacies of breed judging and, of course, the undeniable pleasure of judging beautiful dogs.
